Wanted: Web developer for a high profile global technology charity

Are you looking for an internship or an extra-curricular role that provides you with significant levels of responsibility and develops your skills and portfolio?

We’re looking for students with a good knowledge of web technologies to join our web development team. Ideal candidates will have some experience of HTML, Javascript, PHP and MySQL or be willing to use this as an opportunity to learn more. This will prove an engaging role that can be adapted to your level of expertise.

As well as an interest in international development and an understanding of some of the technological difficulties faced by developing countries, we are looking for a motivated candidate to work a set number of hours per week. An ideal candidate would be a computing student keen to develop their skills and experience in this field whilst helping to empower the U8 to make a difference.

Our past interns and members of the Executive Committee have gone on to work for management consultancies, in private equity and investment banking, while others have progressed to set up their own social enterprises, or worked for the UN as well as civil service fast streams in both developed and developing countries. We have a strong track record of developing our intern’s skills and preparing them for careers in the public, private and third sector and have strong contacts within top graduate employers through our alumni network.

The role can be based from anywhere in the world as long as you have regular internet access.

To apply, please send a CV, a short covering letter setting out your experience and skills and what you can offer the U8 to: recruitment@u8development.org and james@u8development.org

About the U8

The U8 is a non-partisan platform, enabling students from around the world to discuss some of the most pressing issues of our generation. It was founded as a reaction to the 2005 G8 summit, where a small group of countries seemed to set the development agenda. We believe that those affected by global poverty should have the strongest voice in discussing development issues.

We’ve previously brought students from across Europe, South and Central Asia, Africa as well as Central America together to discuss development issues in person with a view to engaging policy makers and the media. Our summits in Warwick and Cambridge brought the student voice to the attention of governments and the world’s media, including the Guardian and Hindu.

But 2011 sees our most ambitious project to date: we want thousands of students from all around the world to be able to participate in a truly global conversation – not just a few hundred. And so in November 2011 we’ll have the first U8 online summit, enabling thousands of students from around the world to share ideas and perspectives with each other.
