Job Title: Intern/Volunteer
Web Site Design and Development, and online networking strategy Intern

Start Date: ASAP

About NEW Course:

NEW Course is a start-up not for profit organization committed to empowering communities, especially women, to effectively manage natural resources for the benefit of men, women and children everywhere. NEW Course recognizes that men and women have unique interests in natural resource management, take on unique roles and responsibilities in their communities, and make different decisions as to how natural capital should be spent. These gender differences shape ecological change, options for well-being and livelihoods, and strategies for conservation and sustainable development. NEW Course identifies: 1) the most pressing issues hindering resource management, 2) the most capable partners for delivering results on the ground, and 3) the financial resources and the methodologies necessary to empower resource users to effectively manage their natural capital.

Job description:

Initially, the position will entail working directly with the founders of NEW Course to design and develop a state of the art web platform that will be a cornerstone of the business plan. This platform will provide a mechanism for exchanging information about the organization’s mission and projects on the ground with donors, partners, recipients and members of the public across multiple technology platforms. The web-site will also enable secure transactions for fundraising purposes. However, the full scope of the project entails helping develop innovative, novel approaches to the not-for-profit industry. For example, NEW Course will use a web based platform not only for fundraising but as a sight to upload images, video, blogs from the field/communities and foster interactions between donors and recipient communities, interactive mapping etc...

In addition to building a web-based platform, NEW Course seeks advice and strategic development of a social networking/on-line communication plan.
